PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

[All society and personal notes for the Sunday issue of the Journal, to secure publication, must be in the hands of the city editor by Saturday

A novel and interesting entertainment has just been given in Philadelphia for a charitable purpose. It originated with one of fashion's leaders in that city, and was called "a game of whist, with living cards, set to music." Fifty-two persons took part, each costumed to represent some card. Two ladies and two gentlemen played the game. fhe shuffling was done by all the figures mingling on the floor, and the cutting by one of the players walking through the center of the crowd. After the deal the four cards played in turn were led to the center of the hall, where they danced a quadrille, german or fancy figure. The one who had taken the trick escorted the quartet back to his or her group. The costuming was very effective, especially those of the honor or "court" cards. The men of the club and spade, ordinary suit cards, were sashes of ribbon, covered with the cards represented, across their dress-coats, from shoulder to the side. The ladies having the spot cards of hearts and diamonds wore white gowns, with bands of the cards represented. Each also had a pair of the same cards on one shoulder as well as several tiny cards of the same denomination on their gauze fans. Those representing the face cards were richly attired, and followed the costumes of the deck as near as possible, silks, satins and velvets being used, while crowns thickly studded with jewels adorned the heads of the royal family. The game was played without a balk or an awkward movement, and the interest of every one was sustained from the beginning to to the close of the game. The description of the audience contained the announcement that no bonnets were worn; that full evening dress was the rule, and that white and pink were the favorite tints for gowns. Also, that sprays of flowers were worn on the right shoulder. The entertainment was given in the Art Club rooms, and the belles and beaux of the city were the actors. A similar amusement could be given here, for the city has plenty of beautful girls and handsome young men, who would make a gilt-edge deck for whist, with no limit of good players.

Personal Mention. The shuffling was done by all the figures
